The pathway of bereavement can be a long, winding and often perplexing journey. This conference will provide professionals with new ideas and practical strategies to enhance their work and ministry to others. They will gain new insights for helping families and individuals—whether they are facing a death or living through the bereavement that follows one. Using real-world cases and useful updates from contemporary bereavement research and practice, you will discover practical ideas for supporting families and individuals in bereavement and at the end of life. When you leave, you will know you are better equipped to walk alongside people on their unique journeys through grief.

Learning Objectives:

At the conclusion of this workshop, participants will be able to:

- Use a process model of bereavement to effectively assess and intervene with mourners.
- Identify key strategies to intervene when bereavement becomes complicated as a result of family history, psychopathology or traumatic circumstances.
- Intervene effectively with patients and families in anticipatory grief and when dying seems especially prolonged.
- Apply the latest evidence on gender issues in grief counseling.
