

parking lot at noon

seagulls sitting
randomly
throughout the parking lot like dirty
discarded diapers

white spots
splattered
over their black
canvas world.

Angela is a senior at UWGB studying Studio Arts, Creative Writing, and Graphic Design. Like any creative person, she is motivated to express herself and the world around her as she experiences it. Her dad would call her a “deep” thinker, but sometimes her works, like this poem, are simply humorous observations. She has previously had work published in Sheepshead Review and Flesh from Ashes.
