Many major corporations and organizations hire new college graduates into entry-level rotational or leadership development training programs. These programs are designed to provide entry-level hires with a cross functional perspective of an organization. These “trainees” spend several weeks or months in each of the key functional areas of the organization. The goal of these programs is to expose high potential employees to multiple aspects of the organization with the hope that they will advance in the future to lead across those functional areas. Trainees receive a salary and benefits and are employees of the organization. These training programs last anywhere from six months to two years, and after completion, trainees assume entry-level management positions within the organization. A number of these programs may have application timelines during the fall semester. These training programs are not to be confused with specific short-term Gap Year experiences. To help you explore these programs, Career Services compiled the following list. Keep in mind that this is not an exhaustive list; the intention is for you to use it as a starting point.
