Environmental Science and Policy (Masters)

Results of the program review indicate that Environmental Science and Policy has a clear, programmatic mission that is consistent with UW-Green Bay’s select mission. The program is designed to serve part-time and full time students, courses are alternatively scheduled, and selected undergraduate students are given the opportunity to continually progress from a bachelor’s degree into the masters program. Faculty are active in scholarship and well published. The program as a whole and the thesis in particular are highly rated by students. Areas in need of improvement include program advising; increasing the number of underrepresented faculty, staff and students; and increasing resources, particularly the number of graduate assistantships. Continuation of the program was recommended at all levels of review.
